I will present what I feel is undeniable evidence on how Gil-galad works better as a character if he is left as Fingon's son. I will also delve into the anomaly of the happy accident that made it this way in the book and how Christopher Tolkien, who had the control to keep the change, should have left it that way. (Will be repeated: Saturday @ 10am)	Meeting Rm D

3:00 pm - 4:30pm	Willie Jenkins: ~C~ "The Problem with Orodreth" It brings me much joy to present a panel pointing out the many flaws and failures in Orodreth's kingship. 4:00 pm - 5:00 pm	Dr. Michael Drout: "Jerry Springer goes to Middle-Earth" For years I have done an exercise in my Tolkien classes in which students are chosen to represent the characters at the Council—and even some who were not invited, including Sauron, Gollum, Denethor, Saruman, and Gwaihir the Eagle. The students are responsible for taking their character's parts and advocating for their interests in an un-scripted debate about the geopolitics of Middle-earth in light of the finding of the Ring. There have been some great moments in these debates: in 2008 I asked the student representing Saruman "What do you have to offer to Middle-earth?" and in an utterly deadpan voice he said: "Hope and Change." There was a short pause followed by mass laughter. In 2018, in response to the same question, the student representing Saruman said: "With the Ring I would build a BETTER Dark Tower! The Best Dark Tower! The BEST! I understand Dark Tower building probably better than anyone else in Middle-earth! And it would be the biggest, most beautiful Dark Tower EVER!" It took a good five minutes for the class to stop laughing. And everyone, both times, got the point	the Party Site on stage or in front of Bag End
